Working with High-Risk Adolescents An Individualized Family Therapy Approach

Matthew D. Selekman, MSW

Foreword by Harlene Anderson, PhD

Many clinicians today are increasingly being referred challenging high-risk adolescents coming from multi-problem families with extensive treatment histories. In his tradecraft fashion, Matthew Selekman provides the perfect antidote, a highly practical eco-systemic, strengths-based integrative family therapy approach that targets interventions at the adolescent, family, social network, school, juvenile justice, and community levels. Carefully blending family therapy science with therapeutic artistry, Selekman's book provides grateful therapists with a treasure trove of effective and empirically supported therapeutic tools and strategies for a wide range of serious adolescent behavioral difficulties.

Critical Acclaim

“Matthew Selekman’s book should be open on every desk of every professional working with adolescents; it is a tour de force and difficult to imagine it ever being surpassed as a guide to working with adolescents in serious difficulty. Not only are Selekman’s suggestions clear and simple, he takes time to address every conceivable stumbling point on the way to a successful outcome. Selekman brings to the book not just a lifetime of face-to-face work with adolescents and their families but erudition second to none. The book is a gift to the future of any struggling adolescent who is lucky enough to meet a professional who has read it. Everyone should be that professional.”

—Chris Iveson, CQSW

“This book’s gifts of ‘clinical practice wisdom’ will be of value to the reader whether they are a therapist, community agency worker, child and adolescent social services staff or advocate. Selekman’s case examples demonstrate his respect, compassion, and trust for what the adolescent and their family express they need in the moment. With seemingly contradictory powers of confidence and uncertainty, Selekman creates a sense of client ownership for the therapy and the expectation of hope for his clients’ desired futures.”
